• Acne, Outgrowing and Overcoming

Acne is a common skin problem resulting from inflammation of skin glands and hair follicles. It is mostly common in teenagers, but can also appear later in life.

The reasons for acne vary and might be due to hormonal imbalance, stress and over activity of skin glands among others. Beyond the esthetic issues, acne might dramatically affect teenagers and adolescents self image. For these reasons, treating acne should be immediate and efficient.

• Treating Acne the Old Fashion Way: Drying the Skin

Most treatments for acne deal with the problem by drying the skin where the pimples erupt. This treatment can cause a multitude of side effects such as irritation of the skin, massive proliferation of new skin cells, abundance of dead skin cells and clogging the skin pores.

• Next Generation Treatment – Young Sebu (Clarifying and oil control)

The innovative treatment kit – Young Sebu is an all natural active ingredients treatment for oily and problematic skin.

The unique handmade soap is based on an ancient formula containing the specific constituents of Goat milk, Tea tree oils, Dead Sea minerals, Olive oil, Vitamin E and Natural Glycerin.

Goat Milk to Fight Acne

Acne vulgaris, also referred to as cystic acne, is a common skin ailment that affects 17 million people within the United States each year with 8 out of 10 being teenagers. Not all cases of acne are considered "severe". In fact, the most common type of acne vulgaris occurs when hair follicles on the skin clog with dirt and oil to cause an irritated bump. It was originally believed that severe acne was due to poor diet, oily skin and bacterial invasion, but recent research shows that individuals suffering from severe acne are more likely suffering from an inflammatory disorder of the pilosebaceous units in the skin. These structures are located within the hair follicle and are directly associated with the sebaceous glands and when they suffer from oxidative stress, severe acne can manifest itself.

Ancient Egyptians considered the goat a prized possession. Pharaohs were known to be buried with goat's milk and cheeses for use in the afterlife due to its health benefits and eventually ancient Greeks and Romans picked up on the tradition of utilizing goats milk for medicinal purposes. Today, goat's milk is still used more than cow's milk, which speaks for itself. Goat's milk is high in essential nutrients such as vitamin A, B2, D and E as well as protein, phosphorous and potassium. Since goat's milk contains oligosaccharides, a natural anti-inflammatory component, it is used to treat stomach ulcers and bowel irritation worldwide in holistic medicinal applications.

An Israeli skincare company has recently begun incorporating the powerful anti-inflammatory properties of goat's milk into skincare treatments for severe acne. By utilizing all-natural, pure goat's milk in combination with natural minerals from the Dead Sea, this revolutionary acne treatment will set a new standard when it comes to acne care. With its natural anti-inflammatory properties, goat's milk can soothe the pilosebaceous units in the skin and reduce irritation. The natural fat proteins will also soothe any itching or burning associated with severe acne and leave the skin feeling fresh and smooth. Peeling and scabs associated with severe acne are significantly reduced with goat's milk treatments, while the vitamin E in goat's milk protects the pilosebaceous units from oxidative damage.

Research has shown that using a combination of all-natural Dead Sea minerals with pure goat's milk is highly effective at treating severe acne cases. Since oxidative stressors and damage trigger the start of severe acne, the sebaceous glands are more susceptible to bacterial acne breakouts. Utilizing a treatment to stop the anti-inflammatory process from the start and reduce oxidative stressors will prevent bacterial acne from introducing itself on the skin and reduce the systematic inflammation of the pilosebaceous units. Inflammation prevention reductions on the skin and within the body are essentials for clear, healthy skin. It is recommended that an all-natural goat's milk treatment is combined with lifestyle and dietary changes, especially for those who have a genetic predisposition to bacterial acne, naturally oily skin or inflammatory diseases.
